Barco collaborates with IntuiLab on a multitouch demonstrator

Washington D.C, May 3rd, 2010 - At the Sea Air Space 2010 show, Barco is presenting a demonstrator developed in cooperation with IntuiLab that allows a user to manipulate information using a multitouch screen and remotely control the display content and information on large collaborative screens or any other screen connected to the network. Information includes pictures, graphics data, sensor information, slides and video streams generated by an Axis cam.

Lieven Claey's, Market Director, Barco Defense and Avionics Division, said "This demonstrator has been designed to collect feedback from our customers around more natural, thus more efficient interactions that could be available in C4ISR rooms in the near future". Lieven Claey's added "We looked at IntuiLab, a worldwide leader in Surface Computing, for helping us building this demonstrator in a very short timeframe and they delivered it beyond our expectations".

After Sea Air Space 2010, Barco will present that demonstrator during various international customer events and meetings.
